Hebrew College Publishes High Holiday Companion

Jewish tradition teaches that as we traverse the winding path of teshuvah (return and renewal) each year during the High Holy Day season, it is wise to do so with fellow seekers.

To help guide your steps, the faculty, alumni, and students of Hebrew College have created a collection of reflections on the prayers, scriptural readings, and sacred practices of Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur. Featuring original essays, poetry, and visual artwork, this booklet will help illuminate the way into the High Holiday liturgy and these sacred days of return and renewal.
While the full booklet will be available for purchase later this summer (learn more here), we are sharing several pieces from it digitally over the coming weeks. We hope this will provide you with personal nourishment and materials for teaching and preaching as we move through the summer, the final months of the Jewish calendar, and the Days of Awe.

Commenting on this new project, Rabbi Or Rose, Director of the Miller Center for Interreligious Learning & Leadership, said, “We are honored to share the heartfelt reflections of a diverse group of Hebrew College students and teachers with a broad audience. These pieces all emerge from the contributors’ own ethical and spiritual journeys through the Yamim Noraim (Days of Awe).”

We invite you to read the first selection, which is an exploration of the meaning of the sounding of the shofar by Rabbi Daniel Lehmann, president of Hebrew College. In this thought-provoking piece, Rabbi Lehmann explores the laws of this ancient and evocative ritual, and ponders the spiritual significance of the sequence of the shofar blasts.

Rachel Raz to Produce The Torah Space Project
Did you know that Shoolman School Early Childhood Institute Director Rachel Raz (bottom, right) is also the executive producer of the forthcoming movie The First Torah in Space: What Lessons Can We Learn From It?

When the Shoolman School hosted American Jewish astronaut Dr. Jeff Hoffman last January, he played footage of himself reading from the Torah in space and explaining its significance. “The educator in me immediately felt that this was a missed opportunity, and I asked him if he would be open to making a documentary movie about his story and the story of the specific Torah that he brought with him,” said Raz.

Dr. Hoffman was one of the first American Jewish astronauts to fly to space. Over five missions, he chose to take with him several Jewish artifacts such as mezuzahs and dreidels. The highlight was a small and light Torah scroll that he took with him in 1996. “Going into space did not make the Torah more special, the Torah made space more special,” said Hoffman.

Raz has already begun promoting the movie. In June, she gave a session at the Institute of Southern Jewish Life conference in Jackson, MS in which she examined the questions: What can outer space teach us about Jewish education? Why was it so important to Dr. Hoffman to bring those Jewish objects aboard the space shuttle? And what can we learn from him about priorities and choices?

The Dual Nature of Shofar
By Rabbi Daniel Lehmann
President, Hebrew College

The sounding of the shofar, the ram’s horn, during the month of Elul leading up to Rosh Hashanah and on Rosh Hashanah itself, has a dual nature.

In one of the classic medieval codes of Jewish law, the Arba’ah Turim, the laws of Rosh Hashanah are introduced by describing the custom to blow the shofar during the month before Rosh Hashanah. Two verses are brought to support this practice. The first, from Psalms 47:6, reads: “God ascends amidst the blast, the Lord with the sound of the shofar.” The code of Rabbi Yaakov ben Asher explains that this verse recalls the moment when Moses ascends the mountain to receive the second set of covenantal tablets, and the shofar is sounded to mark Moses’ ascent and God is also raised up by the blasts of the shofar.

How Pure Does the Coalition Have to Be?
Parshat Mattot/Massei, Numbers 30:2-32:42

By Rabbi Avi Killip, Rab’14
Vice President of Strategy and Programs and Director of Project Zug at Mechon Hadar

How pure does the coalition have to be? This is the question of the moment. Within the Jewish community, as well as in the broader political world—groups on both sides of the aisle are looking at the people standing next to them, working with them for a joint cause, and wondering how much room there is for difference when it comes to vision and goals. We recognize the need to work together and the need for participation and support from as many people as possible. And yet, when someone reveals a motive we don’t share—and that we might not understand, we get scared and even more so, we get angry. What makes diversity within our ranks so scary? What is it that we are afraid of?
